

Coronavirus and mental wellbeing for Carers and Young Carers

The term 'carer' is used here to describe someone who provides, or intends to provide, practical and emotional support to someone with a physical or mental health problem.

You may or may not live with the person you care for. They may be your spouse, partner, a relative, friend or neighbour, but you are in a position of providing support to someone.

This guide has been produced to help support you during the Coronavirus (COVID-19) outbreak.

In addition to our guidance on mental wellbeing, there are a range of organisations you can contact for additional help and support if you care for someone else. This includes some of the Public Health England's guidance for if you are a child or young person who cares for someone else or are an adult carer. Or someone who supports an adult with a learning disability and/or autism.

Planning with your child or young person what will happen if you or another member of the family they care for becomes unwell, including contact details for others who can step in and support them, will help to reduce anxiety.

Children and young people who care for others

Some children and young people may have existing caring responsibilities for adults or siblings that they live with. They may be anxious about what will happen if the person they care for becomes unwell, or what will happen if they themselves become unwell and unable to support the person they care for. Even if they don't currently act as a carer, it is possible that they may become one if they are in a household with one adult.

Kernow Young Carers/Action for Children

Support children and young people who have caring responsibilities for a family member who may be affected by ill health, disability, mental ill health or substance misuse. During the coronavirus outbreak families will still receive 1:1 support via phone, and have access to virtual groups and funding.

Their Facebook page has lots of information, virtual activities (which has been extended to books, school supplies, DVDs and games) and information on how to apply for a young carers break.

The team are using social media and Microsoft Teams to remain contactable and provide advice and support. They are also providing their usual youth group activities through Microsoft Teams.

All parents of children aged 0 - 19 years can speak either online or via phone about anything from finances to worry and anxiety:

Plan how you will access medication

If you are caring for someone who needs medication, you might be able to order repeat prescriptions by phone, or you may be able to do this online using an app or website, if your doctor's surgery offers this.

Ask your pharmacy about getting medication delivered or think about who you could ask to collect it for you. The NHS website has more information about getting prescriptions for someone else and checking if you have to pay for prescriptions.

Continue to order repeat prescriptions in your usual timeframe. There is no need to order for a longer duration or larger quantities.

You might also want to make arrangements for anyone you care for if you become unwell, for example making sure a partner, friend, family member or neighbour is aware of important information including their care plan, medications and emergency numbers.

Caring for people with physical health issues

People with long term physical health issues, such as those who need continuous use of a breathing machine or are confined to a wheelchair or bed, might have more intense distress, worry or anger than those without these issues because they have less control over day-to-day wellbeing than other people. Support them by listening to their concerns, providing open and honest explanations about the situation, and giving them information about what is being done to protect them.

Supporting adults with learning disabilities and autistic adults

Someone with a learning disability and/or autism will have unique needs and preferences, which includes the need for additional support to understand the latest Government advice through to any changes to their care. All care and support should continue to be given in the least restrictive way possible and continue to maximise independence wherever possible. Public Health England have provided specific guidance to help you to protect yourself and the person you care for, make plans in case you are unable to continue with your caring role, make information accessible, maintain active lifestyles, care for someone who is extremely vulnerable or has symptoms of Covid-19 and to cope with bereavement.

Mental Health Safety Plans

A safety plan is for someone to use when they are feeling that their mental health and wellbeing is low, and/or that they are at risk of self-harm or acting on suicidal thoughts – a plan to remind themselves of reasons to live, family and friends they can talk with and things that can make them feel strong and in control of their feelings.

By having a safety plan, you're making sure that there are strategies you can use to keep yourself safe, which can help you feel more in control when everything feels out of control. Think of your safety plan as your 'mental health first-aid kit'; it includes different things that will help you through a crisis.

Everyone's plan is personal and different, but it can help by walking someone through their steps to keep them safe. For people who self-harm or feel suicidal it's not designed to be their only support, but can help as part of a wider approach to supporting their wellbeing.

More information about how you can support someone to create a safety plan, alongside signposting to further sources of support, access to free online suicide prevention and general wellbeing training for adults, and Papyrus' children's safety plan can be found on the Cornwall Council website.
